- Public Comments
  - a. A member of the community, Lawrence (Larry) Schultz from Omaha, gave an example of an experience he had when he was using a relay service/VRI interpreter. He commented that the interpreter appeared uninterested and apathetic on screen, which made him feel that they did not want to be there as an interpreter. It seemed harder to effectively communicate/utilize interpreter services when the interpreter did not seem friendly or seem to care about their job. He also expressed that oftentimes, the interpreters he has encountered using relay do not ask for correction and he often must repeat himself and correct errors on his own. He mentioned that he thought it would be a better experience if the interpreters appeared more friendly.

Ms. Margie Propp asked whether he had contacted the relay service company to report this experience. She suggested he write a letter. Ms. Sharon Sinkler added that if he wanted assistance in writing up a letter, that Larry should contact the Omaha office of NCDHH where their Advocacy Specialists would be happy to help.

- b. A second member of the community, Patti Reitz from Omaha, asked to clarify the services offered by NCDHH, specifically if they are still handling interpreter referrals. Mr. Wyvill offered clarification that NCDHH no longer handles interpreter referrals, but instead they refer out to interpreter referral agencies. There is a list of them on the website. If there is an issue with finding an interpreter through the interpreter referral agencies, Mr. Wyvill suggested contacting NCDHH at that point so they can take further action.

Ms. Flearl stressed that one of the greatest allies for members of the community is NCDHH. Ms. Flearl reminded those in attendance that for any issue with communication or access they should get in touch with the local NCDHH office where they will receive help from one of the advocacy specialists.

- c. Speaking as a member of the community, outside of her role on the board, Mrs. Tami Richardson-Nelson described a situation that had been brought to her attention. CHI Bergan has no available interpreters/VRI in the emergency room.

Ms. Flearl suggested that the individuals who reached out to Mrs. Richardson-Nelson could contact NCDHH about this issue as well.

- d. A fourth community member, Rita Johnson, had a question about her rights when she is a patient at a doctor's office. She wanted to know if a doctor's office offers VRI interpreter services, does the patient have a right to request an onsite/live interpreter in place of the VRI service? Or does the patient have to accept the VRI services? Mr. Wyvill offered an answer and explanation; the patient has a right to "effective communication" – the definition of "effective communication" is defined by the individual/patient. Therefore, if an onsite/live interpreter is what the patient believes is best for their case and is the best way they can have access to medical information during their appointment then they have the right to request an onsite interpreter so they can make informed medical decisions.

Ms. Propp spoke up and suggested that if a patient is wanting an onsite interpreter, they need to request one at the time of making their appointment to give adequate time for the doctor's office to find an available interpreter. Mr. Schultz added a comment in that often doctor's offices have a hard time securing interpreters and sometimes a scheduled interpreter doesn't show up for the appointment and he is left to write back and forth. Ms. Propp added that if there are issues with an office not being able to supply an interpreter, the patient needs to file a complaint and contact NCDHH. Mr. Wyvill also added to his explanation that sometimes, a patient needs to be prepared to self-advocate and be able to explain outright what and why they feel a specific type of communication is their most effective communication. He suggested that if you use "legal" terms like "best practice" it can sometimes really grab the attention of the office you're working with. If these experiences are not reported, the issue will become a pattern.

- e. Mr. Schultz recounted another experience on behalf of a friend using VRI/relay service for a medical appointment. A female friend had a medical appointment concerning women's health. Her VRI interpreter was male and appeared uncomfortable interpreting the content between the doctor and patient which led to her not getting the appropriate information from her medical appointment. Ms. Propp offered a reminder that there is an option to "request a different interpreter" on most VRI services.

The Rural Access Fund applies to people outside of the Omaha and Lincoln metro areas for interpreter services (on-site interpreters ONLY) and will reimburse the cost for portal-to-portal travel and interpreter expenses. A reimbursement form will be filled out and submitted to NCDHH, and the expenses for the interpreter will be paid by the agency.
